The New Danger from Nuclear Weapons

On a sunny Saturday afternoon, August 9th, LEPOCO members and friends gathered in Bethlehem's Rose Garden at the LEPOCO Peace Pole to commemorate the 80th anniversary of the atomic bombings of Japanese cities, specifically on this date, Nagasaki. The readings, songs, and poetry at this year's commemoration come at a new time of danger, yet the larger public has hardly noticed.

To be sure, there were reminders of the looming danger we all now face. The Bulletin of Atomic Scientists moved the famous "Doomsday Clock," a second closer to midnight (now 89 seconds away). Legacy media did their usual color segments on what happened in 1945 and how important it is to remember, and so on. But mostly the anniversary of the bombings this year was accompanied by an eerie, numbed acceptance. An abstract knowledge of what nuclear war can do — a holocaust capable of exterminating human life on the planet — has simply become part of the background horror of everyday life. We don't think about it much except when reminded to do so, as we are in early August.

Yet the threat is not only real, it's growing. We have entered a new era of nuclear danger in some ways greater than that of the Cold War with its strategy of Mutually Assured Destruction. For one thing, the safety net, such as it was, of agreements to limit nuclear weapons is collapsing. Russia recently announced it was abandoning the 1987 Intermediate-Range Nuclear Forces (INF) treaty, which banned medium- and short-range missiles. Russia blamed NATO for its decision and had a point — Trump renounced the INF treaty in 2018. The next to go will be the New Strategic Arms Reduction Treaty (New Start), which lapses next February.

At the same time, the three major nuclear-armed powers, the U.S., Russia, and China, are all investing heavily on the expansion and "modernization" of their arsenals. Since 2020, China has doubled its stockpile of nuclear warheads to about 600. Trump's 2026 budget will increase spending on nuclear weapons by $87 billion, an increase of 26%. Russia has developed a new hypersonic, nuclear-capable missile that travels ten times the speed of sound. According to the International Campaign to Abolish Nuclear Weapons (ICAN), last year the world's nine nuclear-armed states spent over $100 billion on nuclear weapons, up 11% on 2023.

There is also growing acceptance of the idea that nuclear weapons are not just a deterrent but can be used on the battlefield to win wars, thus justifying the proliferation and use of smaller "tactical" nukes, with 3-5 times the power of the 1945 bombs. Autonomous AI systems may soon make or assist the decision on whether to use these weapons, an ominous prospect, indeed.

Russia and the U.S. together possess about 90% of the >12,000 nuclear warheads presumed to exist. In both countries, the power to start a nuclear war now lies with two impulsive, authoritarian rulers who lack external restraints. Both sides have rattled their nuclear sabers over the war in Ukraine. The world failed to greet these mutual threats with clear and sustained outrage.

In the Middle East, the only nuclear armed state, Israel, uses this leverage to attack wherever it wishes — occupied Palestine, Lebanon, Syria, Yemen, and, most recently, Qatar. This summer Israel, then joined by the

Lehigh Valley Responds to ICE

"When our rights are under attack, what do we do? Stand up, fight back!" If you've ever been to a protest, you've probably heard a variation of this chant a time or two. It's catchy. It's easy to follow. And it sends a clear message, "If you mess with our community, we won't sit by quietly." Right now, immigrants are under attack in the United States, including right here in the Lehigh Valley. They are being kidnapped by masked men, tossed in jail, and demonized by some of the nation's highest ranking political figures. This is unacceptable, and we are fighting back.

Earlier this year, a group of individuals, churches, and community organizations gathered together to form the Emergency Response Network (ERN) in response to the administration's cruel and unjust immigration policies. Since then, the ERN organized a rapid response hotline that activates a group of over 100 volunteers to show up with love to support our neighbors when ICE shows up with hate to terrorize our communities. In addition, ERN provides resources to immigrant neighbors through a mutual aid network, pushes for public policies that create safe communities for immigrants, and is organizing a group of court watchers to stand in solidarity with the immigrant community during court hearings. In other words, ERN is fighting back.

If you'd like to get involved in the work of the ERN, please email lehighvalleyrapidresponse@gmail.com or attend one of our training sessions. Our next training session is scheduled for Saturday, October 11th, at 3 pm, at The Cathedral Church of the Nativity (321 Wyandotte St., Bethlehem, PA 18015). To register, call The Cathedral Church at 610-865-0727.

Murder in International Waters

On September 1st, the Trump Administration attacked an alleged drug-smuggling boat in the international waters of the Caribbean, killing 11 people.

Greg Grandin, history professor at Yale University, was interviewed about this on "Democracy Now" on September 5th. He said the attack "was pure murder, and it was pure premeditated murder. It was 11 people in a go-fast boat. If you have that kind of boat, you're not...going to waste space with filling it with 11 people... You're going to want to use that space to carry the drugs.

"And it was premeditated because...11 people were summarily executed...and it's unclear where. There's no information, no intelligence, somewhere in the southern Caribbean, somewhere near Venezuela...

"And this seemed like...a very staged event... When they caught this boat, I guess, on satellite, they gave the execution order. And no bodies have been found... It's bringing the logic of Gaza into the Caribbean, in terms of unaccountability, impunity and an expansive notion of national defense to justify what is, in effect, just extrajudicial killing."

U.S., attacked Iran, supposedly to prevent it gaining nuclear weapons although there was no clear evidence it was seeking them. These attacks brought into sharp relief the "nuclear apartheid" that exists globally — a double standard that contributes to proliferation. Nations without nuclear weapons, especially in the Middle East, are surely incentivized to pursue them in the name of security and self-defense.

Thus far, ninety-four nations, mostly in the global south, have signed the 2017 Treaty on the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons — a pledge to entirely renounce nuclear weapons. Those states holding nuclear weapons have so far given no indication of joining them. It is time we consider how best to educate a new generation about what Mutually Assured Destruction might really mean.

Walking Alongside Someone at the ICE Check-In

I recently volunteered through Project Libertad to accompany an individual to their ICE check-in. As I walked up to the building, I noticed two men talking. One was the man I was there to accompany. The other, undocumented as well, asked me if I was a lawyer, because he needed one. He had been there earlier for an appointment, because the ankle tracking device that had been put on him at a prior appointment had injured him. The man I was there to meet tried to motivate and lift the spirits of the man with the ankle tracking device. I observed him during that initial exchange; he had a backpack with his papers organized, and he was polite and kind. The other man told us that he was going back to work. I saw his tired and sad-looking eyes; he looked exhausted.

We had trouble finding the office as it isn't accessed through the main entrance. It bothered me that others with appointments may struggle to find the office for these crucial appointments. Once we entered the office, I noticed signs stating that no phones are allowed at all. My plan had been to have my phone on me as backup, in case anything unfortunate should happen.

Wanting to have a phone to document anything didn't become an issue, because I was told to leave almost immediately. They wouldn't let me stay in the waiting room. The woman at the desk told me I had to leave because I wasn't a lawyer or translator. When I repeated that I was there for translation support, she said that they had plenty of people who speak Spanish. I went and stood right outside the door to the office. Eventually I went and sat down on the curb.

Film: "The Encampments" Shown in Bethlehem

On the evening of Friday, September 5th, the Lehigh Valley Palestine Coalition — of which LEPOCO is a member — screened the important film, "The Encampments," at the Cathedral Church of the Nativity.

The documentary film examined the nationwide pro-Palestine "encampment" movement that swept college and university campuses in the Spring of 2024, with special emphasis on events at Columbia University. Although elected officials and university administrators attempted to paint the encampments as rife with antisemitism, it is clear that many Jewish students participated in them and that incidents of real antisemitism were vanishingly rare. The student movement did express outrage at Israel's destruction of Gaza and fervent support for the rights of Palestinians.

The feature-length film traced events at Columbia chronologically, with developments on the campus interspersed with footage from the Gaza war, interviews with encampment participants, and historical clips from the anti-war movement of the 1960s, when students also expressed the conscience of the nation.

University administrators mostly met with intransigence the student attempts to force universities to divest from investing in armaments for Israel, and eventually they called in police to violently suppress the movement. Nevertheless, the encampments made a major contribution to a sea-change in public opinion concerning Israeli settler colonialism and the rights of the Palestinian people.

Prof. Drew Swedberg of Lafayette College's Film and Media Studies program, which cosponsored the screening, introduced the film and led a spirited discussion afterwards. The engaged audience of about 120 people, which divided itself into small groups, talked about how the documentary changed their views, how they received their political education, and the connection between the film and local events.

At the back of the auditorium the Lehigh Valley Palestine Coalition displayed a detailed timeline of pro-Palestinian actions in the Valley, with a special focus on what has happened from October 2023 on. Some of the Coalition organizations set up literature, merchandise and sign-up tables around the periphery of the auditorium. These included Jewish Voice for Peace, LEPOCO, Food Not Bombs, Muslim Youth of the Lehigh Valley, and Democratic Socialists of America. Palestine tee-shirts were sold and donations collected for relief in Gaza. The successful event demonstrated the continuing commitment in the Lehigh Valley to working for a permanent ceasefire in the Gaza Strip war and for Palestinian rights.

Rescheduled

An Art Exhibition

On Friday, October 17th, at 7:00 pm, Carol Baylor, LEPOCO member, will present an art project she has been working on since the spring of 2024.

Called "Art-Trauma-Education-Steadfastness," it is a collection of small, fabric collage banners. The works depict stories of Palestinians and the emotional impact they had on the artist. In a time of numbed silence, can art stimulate a discussion?

The event will be held at the LEPOCO office, 53 E. Lehigh St., Lower Level, Bethlehem 18018.

Stay tuned for new date!

The Struggle Shared

"Hate is a burden too heavy to bear."

The Rev. Martin Luther King, Sr.

THE REV. MARTIN LUTHER KING, SR. lost his wife, Alberta, and his son, Martin Luther King, Jr., to gun violence. He refused to let hatred consume him and continued his commitment to justice throughout his life.

FIGHTING CRIME BY COMMITTING ARMED TROOPS to the streets of major cities is a flagrant violation of the laws and constitution of the country which require that only a state of emergency can justify such interventions. The mayors, other elected officials, and the residents of occupied and threatened cities aver that no state of emergency exists in their hometowns.

Professor and writer, Steven Beschloss wrote, "We are living in dangerous times when a White House occupant threatens war against an American city and its people. This traitorous talk is alarming, but we shouldn't doubt that most Americans reject federal troops in our cities.

"These are times when the indifferent and the too-comfortable need to be roused. This is an opportunity to stand up for American democratic values and principles and the rule of law. In the binary choice between traitors and patriots, let's not lose sight of who's who as the Trump regime falsely imagines their rule will never end."

HR 1, A BILL, also called by some, the "one, big, beautiful bill," was approved by Congress in July. It includes provisions that repeal large portions of green energy incentives while redirecting funding to fossil fuels. These provisions have been raised repeatedly in press and other media coverage. Less prominently covered are certain recissions of funds designed to protect the nation's forests (Sec. 10201). This section cuts certain funds previously provided to the Forest Service as part of the Inflation Reduction Act of 2022 including:

- "the protection of old-growth forests on National Forest System land,
- "grants for nonfederal forest landowners for climate mitigation or forest resilience practices,
- "grants for state and private forestry conservation programs for tree planting, and
- "administrative costs for the National Forest System to implement these and other related programs."

MASSACHUSETTS PEACE ACTION reports that for nearly 12 weeks, organizers Laurie and Jared Berezin stood outside the DHS ICE Boston Field Office alone.

On July 2, the couple amassed a crowd of over 200 people — and that metric grows by the week. This protest is one of many across the country decrying the deportations that were said to be removals of criminals but, instead, threaten people for unrelated attributes (color of skin, non-English speaking, hanging out at Target, and more). Demonstrations are taking place outside the offices of members of Congress and at airports from which shackled people are sent away. In a time of fear and uncertainty, it may seem that the individual can accomplish little. In this story of a couple in Massachusetts wanting to make a difference we see what Mahatma Gandhi once said, "if you do nothing, there will be no result."

(See related story on page 2 of this newsletter and remember the local weekly rallies/vigils on Mondays, Wednesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays.)

POLITICAL VIOLENCE, death by assassination, attacks on prominent people scream across newspapers and television; these tragedies deserve the outpouring of grief and demands for action that accompany the reports. Unfortunately, gun deaths in the United States far exceed similar acts in any other country. Everytown for Gun Safety notes that the gun homicide rate for the United States is 26 times that of other high-income countries. "Every day, 125 people in the US are killed with guns and more than 200 are shot and wounded. The average number of people killed with guns each year is 45,738 from 2019 to 2023. In 2025, there have been at least 57 shootings at K-12 schools, with 29 deaths and 69 injuries reported."

Ashley Lantz, Executive Director of Brady PAC, calls on the country's leaders to adopt the following:

- "Pass common-sense gun safety laws, like universal background checks, an assault weapons ban, and extreme risk protection orders, known as red flag laws, along with secure storage support.
- "Fund evidence-based violence prevention programs in our communities.
- "Stand up to the NRA and other gun lobby groups that continue to put guns before people."

"REVOLUTION WIND" would provide about 704 megawatts of reliable clean power, or enough for 350,000 homes, as well as reduce carbon emissions by more than a million tons per year." Ryan Cooper, writing in The American Prospect, describes the renewable-energy project at the eastern edge of Rhode Island. The project has been stalled by order of the Trump Administration's Bureau of Ocean Energy Management citing possible national security and environmental concerns. Author Ryan Cooper labelled the action a "Madcap Crusade Against Wind."

Long-term Effects of Trump

The Trump administration in its relatively brief second incarnation has demonstrated its lack of concern for the long-term effects of policies that alter or suspend day-to-day operations. As opposition to those policies, many of them achieved by executive order rather than legislative action, mounts, a look at the years ahead if those policies are not reversed is in order. Let's take one example to illustrate the outcome.

Olivier De Schutter, as published in Common Dreams on July 18, 2025, in an opinion piece titled, "Six Months Into His Presidency, Trump Has Created a Global Humanitarian Catastrophe," wrote, "What was billed as a temporary policy reassessment has transformed over the first half of 2025 into a full-blown humanitarian emergency." According to The Lancet, the cuts in funding amounting to $4.9 billion dollars in foreign aid could result in more than 14 million deaths by 2030. A third of them could be young children.

The administration is working to shut down USAID, a major source of global humanitarian aid. The immediate effect of this executive order was the death of an estimated 350,000 people and the destruction of food meant for starving people being destroyed rather than being distributed. Efforts to forestall the cuts have been blocked by a temporary court order by Supreme Court Chief Justice John Roberts.

Long term, the executive order, like many others of similar vein, is setting a dangerous precedent by overturning the legislative process. Congress authorized the expenditure of the funds involved here; under normal circumstances, Congress would reverse the allocation. If there were problems with the program, as has been alleged by some lawmakers, Congress has the right to investigate issues and make changes if warranted. Allowing the decision to end USAID and its funding for a global crisis through an executive order undermines the democratic process established by the Constitution of the United States.

And, what of the United States' standing in the world? How will people across the globe react to the loss of life, the waste of a generation in some countries? The diplomatic fallout could be disastrous for the USA.

Olivier De Schutter continued, "But what does it mean to put America first while letting children elsewhere starve to death? The retreat may feel politically convenient, but the consequences will not stay confined to distant borders. When food systems collapse, migration spikes. When vaccines are cut off, disease spreads. When aid disappears, conflict grows. There is no version of global instability in which the U.S. remains unscathed."

USAID and other programs of foreign assistance are a safeguard against poverty, insecurity, and war, providing for a more stable world. The shutdown of USAID is but one of many actions taken in Washington that will have long-term devastating effects on American democracy, the rule of law, international order and American standing, and the confidence in government of the American people.

I waited an hour and a half then I went in to check on the person. He was still sitting in the waiting room with his head in his hands. When he saw me, I said, "I'm still here, and I will continue to be right outside."

Thirty minutes later, he came out of the office. He was wearing an ankle tracking device. The smile on his face from earlier was gone. They hadn't explained why he had to wear the device or when it would come off. They had told him to walk around for a few minutes, then return.

We walked together as some realities set in. First, they were going to track his whereabouts from then on and possibly were testing it out while he and I were walking. Second, the device was starting to get uncomfortable as we looped around the parking lot. He told me that they had given him more appointments for the coming weeks. He returned to the office and came back out a little later. I don't know why the appointment took so long. We were there for two and a half hours after his scheduled appointment time.

I watched the man deflate over a period of hours. By the end, his hopeful smile was gone. We shook hands and said goodbye. That evening, I received a message that there had been an error, and he would have to return for yet another arbitrary appointment.
